D&M PROFESSIONAL ESTABLISHES EDUCATION TECHNOLOGY ADVISORY COUNCIL (ETAC)

— The ETAC initiative will provide a valuable exchange of information to support D&M Professional's R&D efforts serving higher education customers as well as provide valuable benefits to educators and students —

— ETAC is part of D&M Professional's newly created Education Solutions Division, dedicated to exploring and sharing information about the confluence of AV technology trends —

NAMM SHOW, ANAHEIM, CA, January 18, 2007 — D&M Professional, parent company of Denon Professional and Marantz Professional, announces the creation of the Education Technology Advisory Council (ETAC). This diverse group of experts will include members of the media services, AV managers and directors, classroom technologies teachers and administrators, and others having direct involvement with recording technologies supporting the teaching and learning experience. Expanding on the resources of D&M Professional, the ETAC will comprise a significant and unique knowledge pool in the educational media technology arena.

ETAC is part of D&M Professional's newly created Education Solutions Division (ESD), which is dedicated to exploring and sharing information about the confluence of AV technology trends. Its goal is to support university AV departments and campus technical managers with product and application information relating to digital audio/video media. The members of the advisory council will convene on a quarterly basis, via both telesessions and an annual forum, to exchange information, ideas and opinions directly with D&M Professional management. This invaluable feedback will be used for such applications as new product development, to make future products better aligned with the needs of higher education; and in creating new ways to measure and analyze the entire media technology learning experience. The input from these industry leaders will advance the knowledge base for key applications such as podcasting, visual messaging, archiving, event recording, streaming, digital signage, field recording and distance learning. D&M Professional senior management team will lead the advisory board in fulfilling its objectives.

“D&M Professional recognizes the value and critical need for marketplace involvement in directing the development of new solutions and enhancements of existing products, services and applications,” states Peter Papageorge, D&M Professional Director of Sales and Marketing, who will participate in the group’s activities. “The feedback that this pool of knowledge will bring to product development is sure to significantly enhance the technology-based education environment.”

The newly formed ETAC held its first annual session at D&M Professional’s headquarters in Itasca, IL, on January 11, 2007.
